

R Code and Output

July 28, 2025

```
We will begin by loading ggplot2.
require(ggplot2)

#####
Figure 1 #####
#####

We will start with the panel design.

Set the seed.
set.seed(0)

Create a vector for sample sizes ({1000, 2000, ..., 10000}).
ns<-seq(1000,10000,by=1000)

Create a vector to store the average estimate for each sample size.
ests<-rep(NA,length(ns))

Create a vector to store the standard error for each sample size.
ses<-rep(NA,length(ns))

Create a vector to store the average t-test p-value for each sample size.
ps<-rep(NA,length(ns))

Start a for loop to run through each sample size.
for(j in 1:length(ns)){

  # Set n as the sample size for this iteration.
  n<-ns[j]

  # Set the number of Monte Carlo runs at 10,000.
  r<-10000

  # Set the percentage of respondents who will repeat their Wave 1 answer in Wave 2
  # at 20%.
  p_same<-0.2

  # Create a vector to store the difference between the estimate and the ATE each
  # run.
  diff<-rep(NA,r)

  # Create a vector to store the estimate for each run.
  est<-rep(NA,r)

  # Create a vector to store the t-test p-value for each run.
  p<-rep(NA,r)
}
```

*This report is automatically generated with the R package knitr (version 1.49). It was then modified by Andrew Bertoli.

```

Start the for loop to do the r simulations for this specific sample size.
for(i in 1:r){

  # The potential outcomes under control will be randomly drawn from {1, 2, ..., # 100}. Note that these potential outcomes are defined as the true and honest # Wave 2 answers of the respondents in the counterfactual world where the # event "did not occur." As described in the article, the meaning of "did not # occur" depends on the counterfactual that researchers have in mind.
  y_ikc<-sample(1:100,n,replace=T)

  # The potential outcomes under treatment will be the potential outcomes under # control plus an individual-level treatment effect that will be randomly # drawn from {-2, -1, ..., 12}. Note that these potential outcomes are defined # as the true and honest Wave 2 answers of the respondents in the world where # the event did occur but where the respondents were not surveyed in Wave 1.
  y_ikt<-y_ikc+sample(-2:12, n, replace=T)

  # The level of temporal variation for each respondent will be randomly drawn
  # from {-3, -2, ..., 3}.
  temporal_variation<-sample(-3:3, n, replace=T)

  # Note that the expected value of the temporal variation is 0.

  # We now compute the potential outcomes for each respondent before the event
  # under control, meaning their Wave 1 true and honest answers in the world
  # where the event did not occur.
  y_ikbc<-y_ikc-temporal_variation

  # The level of variation from anticipation of the event for each respondent
  # will be randomly drawn from {-1, 0, 1}.
  anticipation_variation<-sample(-1:1, n, replace=T)

  # The true and honest Wave 1 answers for each respondent in the real world
  # are then just their y_ikbc potential outcomes plus the variation from
  # their anticipation of the event.
  y_ikb<-y_ikbc+anticipation_variation

  # For now, we will set the respondents true and honest Wave 2 answers to be # the same as their Wave 2 true and honest answers in the world where they # were not surveyed in Wave 1. In other words, we will assume 0% panel # conditioning, which we will change later.
  y_ika<-y_ikt

  # We will draw measurement error before the event from a Poisson distribution
  # with rate 1.
  e_kb<-rpois(n,1)

  # We will draw measurement error after the event from another Poisson
  # distribution with rate 1.
  e_ka<-rpois(n,1)

  # The observed answers in Wave 2 are the respondents true and honest Wave 2
  # answers after completing the survey in Wave 1, plus the measurement error.
  y_ikao<-y_ika+e_ka

  # The observed answers in Wave 1 are the respondents true and honest Wave 1
  # answers plus the measurement error.
  y_ikbo<-y_ikb+e_kb

```

```

To account for panel conditioning, we will randomly set some respondents to # repeat their Wave 1 answers in Wave 2. We will start by making a vector with # 1's representing respondents who will repeat their answers. Note that we # previously set p_same at 20%.
same<-sample(c(rep(0,n*(1-p_same)),rep(1,n*p_same)))

For the respondents represented by 1 in the vector same, we will set their # observed Wave 2 answers to be the same as their observed Wave 1 answers.
y_ikao[same==1]<-y_ikbo[same==1]

We can now compute and store the difference between the estimate and ATE
for this sample size on this particular run of the for loop.
diff[i]<-mean((y_ikao-y_ikbo)-(y_ikt-y_ikc))

We can also compute and store the estimated treatment effect for this sample # size on this particular run of the for loop.
est[i]<-mean(y_ikao-y_ikbo)

We will also compute and store the t-test p-value for this particular run of # the for loop.
p[i]<-t.test(y_ikao,y_ikbo,paired=T)$p.value

} # End the for loop for the r runs for this specific sample size.

ests[j]<-mean(est) # Store the average of the estimates for this sample size.

ses[j]<-sd(diff) # Store the standard error for this sample size. We use diff # here instead of est because doing so adjusts for variation
in the data generating process across the simulation runs.
The ATE is about 5 each run, but this value moves around # slightly because of randomness in the data generating # process used to generate the potential outcomes. If we used # the standard deviation of est, this variation would spill # over and inflate our estimate of the true standard error of # the estimator. On the other hand, diff is the difference # between the estimate and ATE each run, so taking the standard # deviation of this difference each iteration removes variation
from small fluctuations in the ATE.

ps[j]<-mean(p) # Store the average of the t-test p-values for this sample size.

} # End the for loop that runs through each sample size.

We will now do the DRS design.

Create a vector for sample sizes ({1000, 2000, ..., 10000}).
ns<-seq(1000,10000,by=1000)

Create a vector to store the average estimate for each sample size.
ests2<-rep(NA,length(ns))

Create a vector to store the standard error for each sample size.
ses2<-rep(NA,length(ns))

```

```

Create a vector to store the average t-test p-value for each sample size.
ps2<-rep(NA,length(ns))

Start a for loop to run through each sample size.
for(j in 1:length(ns)){

  # Set n as the sample size for this iteration.
  n<-ns[j]

  # Set the number of Monte Carlo runs at 10,000.
  r<-10000

  # Create a vector to store the difference between the estimate and the # ATE each run.
  diff<-rep(NA,r)

  # Create a vector to store the estimate for each run.
  est<-rep(NA,r)

  # Create a vector to store the t-test p-value for each run.
  p<-rep(NA,r)

  # Start the for loop to do the r simulations for this specific sample size.
  for(i in 1:r){

    # The potential outcomes under control will be randomly drawn from {1, 2, ..., # 100}.
    y_ikc<-sample(1:100,n,replace=T)

    # The potential outcomes under treatment will be the potential outcomes under # control plus an individual-level treatment effect that will be randomly
    # drawn from {-2, -1, ..., 12}.
    y_ikt<-y_ikc+sample(-2:12, n, replace=T)

    # The level of temporal variation for each respondent will be randomly drawn
    # from {-3, -2, ..., 3}.
    temporal_variation<-sample(-3:3, n, replace=T)

    # We now compute the potential outcomes for each respondent before the event
    # under control, meaning their Wave 1 true and honest answers in the world
    # where the event did not occur.
    y_ikbc<-y_ikc-temporal_variation

    # The level of variation from anticipation of the event for each respondent
    # will be randomly drawn from {-1, 0, 1}.
    anticipation_variation<-sample(-1:1, n, replace=T)

    # The true and honest Wave 1 answers for each respondent in the real world
    # are then just their y_ikbc potential outcomes plus the variation from
    # their anticipation of the event.
    y_ikb<-y_ikbc+anticipation_variation

    # We are assuming no priming bias for DRS, so we will set the y_ika values as # equivalent to the y_ikt values.
    y_ika<-y_ikt

    # We will draw measurement error before the event from a Poisson distribution
    # with rate 1.

```

```

e_kb<-rpois(n,1)

We will draw measurement error after the event from another Poisson
distribution with rate 1.
e_ka<-rpois(n,1)

The observed answers in Wave 2 are the respondents true and honest Wave 2
answers after completing the survey in Wave 1, plus the measurement error.
y_ikao<-y_ika+e_ka

The observed answers in Wave 1 are the respondents true and honest Wave 1
answers plus the measurement error.
y_ikbo<-y_ikb+e_kb

Because DRS involves splitting the sample into one group that does Survey A # before the event and another group that does Survey A after the event, we # only see y_ikbo or y_ikao for each respondent (with respect to Survey A).
To model this in the simulation, we will use the code below to choose about # half the respondents to give Survey A to in Wave 2:
rand<-sample(1:n, round(n/2))

We will get the Wave 2 answers from these respondents.
y_ikao<-y_ikao[rand]

We will get the Wave 1 answers from the other respondents.
y_ikbo<-y_ikbo[-rand]

We can now compute and store the difference between the estimate and ATE
for this sample size on this particular run of the for loop.
diff[i]<-mean((y_ikao-y_ikbo)-(y_ikt-y_ikc))

We will also calculate and store the estimate for this round.
est[i]<-mean(y_ikao)-mean(y_ikbo)

We can also store the t-test p-value for this round.
p[i]<-t.test(y_ikao,y_ikbo)$p.value

} # End the for loop for the r runs for this specific sample size.

ests2[j]<-mean(est) # Store the average of the estimates for this sample size.

ses2[j]<-sd(diff) # Store the standard error for this sample size. We use diff
here instead of est for the reason explained in lines 133-144.

ps2[j]<-mean(p) # Store the average of the t-test p-values for this sample size.

} # End the for loop that runs through each sample size.

Create data frames to store the estimates, confidence intervals, and sample sizes.
Panel<-data.frame(ns,ests,upper=ests+ses*1.96,lower=ests-ses*1.96) # Panel design
DRS<-data.frame(ns,ests2=ests2,upper2=ests2+ses2*1.96,lower2=ests2-ses2*1.96) # DRS

Make the ggplot with the desired customizations.
plot1<-ggplot(Panel,aes(x=ests, y=ns-60), color=blue) + # Start the ggplot, specify # the data frame, set x as # the sample size and y as the # estimate, and set the color.

```

```

Plot the estimates for the panel design.
geom_point(stat="identity",size=1,fill="white",color="blue") +
Plot the standard errors for the panel design.
geom_errorbarh(aes(xmax=upper,xmin=lower), linewidth=0.75,height=0,color="blue") +
Plot the estimates for the DRS design.
geom_point(y=DRS$ns+60,x=DRS$ests2,color="red",size=1) +
Plot the standard errors for the DRS design.
geom_errorbarh(xmax=DRS$upper2,xmin=DRS$lower2,aes(y=ns+60), linewidth=0.75,height=0,color="red") + xlab("Estimated Effect") + # Set the x-axis title.
ylab("Sample Size") + # Set the y-axis title.
theme_classic()+ # Set the theme.
theme(legend.position="none", # Omit the legend.
      axis.text=element_text(size=9.3), # Set the axis text size.
      axis.title=element_text(size=14)) + # Set the axis title size.
xlim(-1,9) + # Set the x-axis limits.
coord_flip() + # Flip the x and y axes.
Add a legend.
geom_rect(aes(xmin = 0.5, xmax = 2.2, ymin = 8000, ymax = 10050), fill="white",colour="black") + annotate("text", x = c(1.535, 2.04, 1.103, 1.6135), y = c(8300, 8300, 9250, 9200), label = c("_", "_", "Panel Design", "DRS Design"), colour=c("Blue", "Red", "black", "black"), size=c(8, 8, 4, 4)) +
Add a dashed line at y=5 to show the ATE.
geom_vline(xintercept=5,linetype=2,colour="purple")

View the figure.
plot1

```

```

Save the figure.
ggsave("Figure_1.pdf",width=7,height=4)

Check the size of the treatment effect
5/sd(y_ikao)

[1] 0.1735005

```

```
#####
Figure 2 #####
#####

We will begin by estimating the MSE for the panel design for different # sample sizes and levels of panel conditioning

Specify the number of runs for each round of the Monte Carlo simulation.
r<-50000

Create a vector containing different values for the proportion of # respondents who repeat their Wave 1 answers in Wave 2.
ps_same<-seq(0,0.5,by=0.05)

Create a vector to store the average estimates for each round.
ests<-rep(NA,length(ps_same))

Create a vector to store the standard errors each round.
ses<-rep(NA,length(ps_same))

Create a vector to store the sample sizes.
ns<-c(seq(700,900,by=100),seq(1000,10000,by=1000))

Create a vector to store the locations where the MSE of the DRS
design is (approximately) equal to the MSE of the panel design.
intersects<-rep(NA, length(ns))

Create a for loop to run through each of the sample sizes # ({700, 800, 900, 1000, 2000, 3000, ..., 10000}).
for(k in 1:length(ns)){

  # Set n as a particular sample size (the k-th element of ns).
  n<-ns[k]

  # Print the sample size. Since the code will take some time to run, # this line will make it easy to tell about how far along we are in # the for loop while it is running.
  print(n)

  # We will first estimate the MSE for the panel design at different levels of # panel conditioning. To do this, we will start a new for loop that will run # through the different levels of panel conditioning that we stored in the # vector ps.
  for(j in 1:length(ps_same)){

    # Create a vector to store the difference between the estimate and the # ATE each run. (We will do r total runs for each sample size and level # of panel conditioning.)
    diff<-rep(NA,r)

    # Create a vector to store the estimated effect for each run.
    est<-rep(NA,r)

    # We will now start a third for loop to do the Monte Carlo simulations # (repeating the process r times for each sample size and level of # panel conditioning).
    for(i in 1:r){
```

```

The potential outcomes under control will be randomly drawn from {1, # 2, ..., 100}. Remember that these potential outcomes are defined as # the true and honest Wave 2 answers of the respondents in the # counterfactual world where the event "did not occur." As described # in the article, the meaning of "did not occur" depends on the # counterfactual that researchers have in mind.
y_ikc<-sample(1:100,n,replace=T)

The potential outcomes under treatment will be the potential outcomes
under control plus an individual-level treatment effect that will be # randomly drawn from {-2, -1, ..., 12}. Note that these potential # outcomes are defined as the true and honest Wave 2 answers of the # respondents in the world where the event did occur but where the # respondents were not surveyed in Wave 1.
y_ikt<-y_ikc+sample(-2:12, n, replace=T)

The level of temporal variation for each respondent will be randomly
drawn from {-3, -2, ..., 3}.
temporal_variation<-sample(-3:3, n, replace=T)

We now compute the potential outcomes for each respondent before the # event under control, meaning their Wave 1 true and honest answers in # the world where the event did not occur.
y_ikbc<-y_ikc-temporal_variation

The level of variation from anticipation of the event for each
respondent will be randomly drawn from {-1, 0, 1}.
anticipation_variation<-sample(-1:1, n, replace=T)

The true and honest Wave 1 answers for each respondent in the real # world are then just their y_ikbc potential outcomes plus the variation
from their anticipation of the event.
y_ikb<-y_ikbc+anticipation_variation

For now, we will set the respondents true and honest Wave 2 answers to # be the same as their Wave 2 true and honest answers in the world where # they were not surveyed in Wave 1. In other words, we will assume 0% # panel conditioning, which we will change later.
y_ika<-y_ikt

We will draw measurement error before the event from a Poisson
distribution with rate 1.
e_kb<-rpois(n,1)

We will draw measurement error after the event from another Poisson
distribution with rate 1.
e_ka<-rpois(n,1)

The observed answers in Wave 2 are the respondents' true and honest
Wave 2 answers after completing the survey in Wave 1, plus the # measurement error.
y_ikao<-y_ika+e_ka

The observed answers in Wave 1 are the respondents' true and honest
Wave 1 answers plus the measurement error.
y_ikbo<-y_ikb+e_kb

To account for panel conditioning, we will randomly set some respondents

```

```

to repeat their Wave 1 answers in Wave 2. We will start by making a # vector with 1's representing respondents who will repeat their answers.
same<-sample(c(rep(0,n*(1-ps_same[j])),rep(1,n*ps_same[j])))

For the respondents represented by 1 in the vector same, we will set # their observed Wave 2 answers to be the same as their observed Wave 1
answers.
y_ikao[same==1]<-y_ikbo[same==1]

We can now compute and store the difference between the estimate and # ATE for this sample size on this particular run of the for loop.
diff[i]<-mean((y_ikao-y_ikbo)-(y_ikt-y_ikc))

We can also compute and store the estimated treatment effect for this # sample size and level of panel conditioning on this particular run of
the for loop.
est[i]<-mean(y_ikao-y_ikbo)

}

ests[j]<-mean(est) # We will store the average of the estimates for the r # runs of the for loop at this sample size and level of
panel conditioning.

ses[j]<-sd(diff) # Store the standard error for this sample size. We use # diff here instead of est for the reason explained in # lines 133-144.

}

We will calculate the mean squared error for this estimator for this # particular sample size.
mse1<-data.frame(ps_same,mse=ses^2+(ests-mean(y_ikt-y_ikc))^2)

We will now estimate the MSE for the DRS design for the given n.

Specify the number of runs for each round of the Monte Carlo simulation.
r2<-50000

Create a vector to store the estimates for each run.
est<-rep(NA,r2)

Create a vector to store the difference between the estimate and the ATE
each run.
diff<-rep(NA,r)

Start the for loop.
for(i in 1:r2){

The potential outcomes under control will be randomly drawn from {1, # 2, ..., 100}.
y_ikc<-sample(1:100,n,replace=T)

The potential outcomes under treatment will be the potential outcomes under # control plus an individual-level treatment effect that will be randomly
drawn from {-2, -1, ..., 12}.

```

```

y_ikt<-y_ikc+sample(-2:12, n, replace=T)

The level of temporal bias for each respondent will be randomly drawn from # {-3, -2, ..., 3}.
temporal_bias<-sample(-3:3, n, replace=T)

We now compute the potential outcomes for each respondent before the event
under control, meaning their Wave 1 true and honest answers in the world
where the event did not occur.
y_ikbc<-y_ikc-temporal_bias

The level of variation from anticipation of the event for each respondent
will be randomly drawn from {-1, 0, 1}.
anticipation_variation<-sample(-1:1, n, replace=T)

The true and honest Wave 1 answers for each respondent in the real world are # then just their y_ikbc potential outcomes plus the variation from their # anticipation of the event.
y_ikb<-y_ikbc+anticipation_variation

We are assuming no priming bias for DRS, so we will set the y_ika values
as equivalent to the y_ikt values.
y_ika<-y_ikt

We will draw measurement error before the event from a Poisson distribution
with rate 1.
e_kb<-rpois(n,1)

We will draw measurement error after the event from another Poisson
distribution with rate 1.
e_ka<-rpois(n,1)

The observed answers in Wave 2 are the respondents true and honest Wave 2
answers after completing the survey in Wave 1, plus the measurement error.
y_ikao<-y_ika+e_ka

The observed answers in Wave 1 are the respondents true and honest Wave 1
answers plus the measurement error.
y_ikbo<-y_ikb+e_kb

Because DRS involves splitting the sample into one group that does Survey A
before the event and another group that does Survey A after the event, we # only see y_ikbo or y_ikao for each respondent (with respect to Survey A).
To model this in the simulation, we will use the code below to choose about
half the respondents to give Survey A to in Wave 2:
rand<-sample(1:n, round(n/2))

We will get the Wave 2 answers to Survey A from these respondents.
y_ikao<-y_ikao[rand]

We will get the Wave 1 answers to Survey A from the other respondents.
y_ikbo<-y_ikbo[-rand]

We will calculate and store the estimate for this run.
est[i]<-mean(y_ikao)-mean(y_ikbo)

We can now compute and store the difference between the estimate and # ATE for this sample size on this particular run of the for loop.

```

```

diff[i]<-mean((y_ikao-y_ikbo)-(y_ikt-y_ikc))

} # End the for loop.

Store the average of these estimates for this sample size.
ests2<-mean(est)

Store the standard error for this sample size. We use diff here instead of # est for the reason explained in lines 133-144.
ses2<-sd(diff)

Store the MSE for the DRS estimator for this sample size.
drs_mse<-ses2^2+(ests2-mean(y_ikt-y_ikc))^2

Estimate an equation for the MSE values for the panel estimator given # different rates of panel conditioning, for this fixed sample size.
panel_mse<-ggplot(mse1,aes(x=ps_same,y=mse))+geom_smooth(method="loess", formula=y~x,span=0.5,se=F) ggplot_build(panel_mse)$data[[1]]$y

Compute the difference between these estimated MSEs for the panel design and the # estimated MSE for the DRS design.
differences<-ggplot_build(panel_mse)$data[[1]]$y-drs_mse

Find the two of these values closest to each side of 0 (meaning closest to where # the panel design and DRS design have the same MSE).
y_lower<-max(differences[differences<=0])
y_upper<-min(differences[differences>=0])

Calculate where 0 is in relation to these two points (on a scale from 0 to 1).
percent_between <- 1-y_upper/(y_upper-y_lower)

Find the x-values for these two points (meaning the level of panel conditioning # where the MSE for the panel and DRS designs are close to equivalent).
x_lower<-ggplot_build(panel_mse )$data[[1]]$x[differences<=0][which.max(differences[differences<=0])] x_upper<-ggplot_build(panel_mse )$data[[1]]$x[differences>=0][which.min(differences[differences>=0])]

Find the level of panel conditioning for the point where the panel and DRS
designs have approximately equivalent MSEs (given this sample size).
intersects[k]<-percent_between*x_upper+(1-percent_between)*x_lower

End the for loop that runs through the sample sizes.
}

[1] 700
[1] 800
[1] 900
[1] 1000
[1] 2000
[1] 3000
[1] 4000
[1] 5000
[1] 6000
[1] 7000
[1] 8000
[1] 9000
[1] 10000

```

```

Store the values along the line of equivalence as a data frame. Note that this line
is an approximation.
dat<-data.frame(n=ns, ps_same=intersects) mse_plot<-ggplot(dat,aes(x=n,y=ps_same),color=black) + # Start the ggplot, specify the # data frame, set x as the # sample size and y as the # percent of respondents who # repeat their answers,

and set the color.

Plot the line of equivalence. Again, this line is an approximation.
geom_smooth(method="loess",span=0.9,se=F,color="black",linetype="dashed") + geom_vline(xintercept=0,linetype="longdash") + # Draw a vertical dashed line at x=0.
geom_hline(yintercept=0,linetype="longdash") + # Draw a horizontal dashed line at y=0.
xlab("Sample Size") + # Set the x-axis title.
ylab("Percentage Who Repeat Wave 1 Answers") + # Set the y-axis title.
Set the y-axis tick marks.
scale_y_continuous(breaks=seq(0,0.5,by=0.1), labels=c("0%", "10%", "20%", "30%", "40%", "50%")) +
  theme_classic() + # Set the theme.
  theme(legend.position="none", # Omit the legend.
        axis.text=element_text(size=9.3), # Set the axis text size.
        axis.title=element_text(size=13)) + # Set the axis title size.
  # Add text at these positions.
  annotate("text", x = c(2600, 6500, 8510), y = c(0.08, 0.3, 0.146), label = c("Panel Design Has\nSmaller MSE",
          "DRS Design Has\nSmaller MSE",
          "Line of Equivalence"), # Specify the text to be added. colour=c("Blue","Red","Black"), size=c(7,7,4.5),angle=c(0,0,-3)) # Customize the text.

View the figure.
mse_plot

'geom_smooth()' using formula = 'y ~ x'

```

```

Save the figure.
ggsave("Figure_2.pdf",width=7,height=4)

'geom_smooth()' using formula = 'y ~ x'

```